A comparative study of biodegradation of toluene and other organic solvents was carried out in a reactor containing ARS, O2 and petroleum oil sludge. An investigation on biodegradation of toluene and other organic solvents was carried out in a reactor containing ARS, O2 and petroleum oil sludge (POS). The biodegradation of toluene was more effective by using only POS than the other two components in the reactor. The optimal conditions of gas type and gas ratio were determined as 1% ARS and 40% O2, respectively. The decay rates of toluene, benzene, xylene and ethylbenzene were higher than 99% for a period of 42 days. The ozone deactivation rate was estimated to be more than 99% under the optimal conditions. The results showed that the biodegradation of toluene by POS was carried out by a synergistic action of O2, ARS and POS, in which the breakdown of organic solvents and the mineral surfaces, followed by the aerobic biodegradation of the mineral surfaces and the final mineralization of organic compounds.
